THE STORIES IN A MUSEUM
Museums

Museums are big buildings where we keep our most important stories safe. The stories are all factually true.
They aren’t stories that are happening now. They are historical.
Keeping factually-true historical stories safe is important.
In a museum:

There are stories about outer space and planets.
There are stories about the earth, and its mountains, rocks, oceans, rivers and streams.
Museum Stories

There are stories about animals, like dinosaurs. There are stories about groups of people who lived before me, all over the world and where I live now.
Museum Stories

There are stories of famous people, and important people, people like me, who have true stories to tell.
In a museum, I can visit the stories of space and planets, dinosaurs and prehistoric times, and people. The stories are all historical and factually true, kept safe in our museums.
